

1. It was observed that 2 out of 3 participants Confused about the circle thing on the Category. This means that the circular icons or buttons in the category section are not visually clear or intuitive enough for users to understand their purpose.
2. It was observed that 2 out of 3 participants “Add to Cart” and “Favorite” buttons are close together. This means that the button placement could cause accidental taps or confusion, reducing the overall usability of the interface
3. It was observed that 2 out of 3 participants frustrated about the hit points for delivery feature and payment so small This means that users may have difficulty selecting these options accurately, especially on smaller screens or touch devices.
4. It was observed that 2 out of 3 participants confused where to add the address. This means that the address input option is not clearly visible or intuitively placed, which could interrupt the ordering flow.
5. It was observed that 3 out of 3 participants need the checkout confirmation. This means that users need reassurance that their purchase details are correct and successfully processed.
6. It was observed that 1 out of 3 participants judged and felt annoyed about cart feature. This means that user really disappointed about the cart.
7. It was observed that 2 out of 3 participants want related book at the end of book details. This means that users are interested in discovering similar books and prefer having recommendations placed conveniently after viewing a book.

